The archer

One of the guards in the Emperor's palace went to a teacher to ask him to help him to be the best archer in the land. The teacher told him to go away. The guard returned every day and begged the teacher to teach him. Day after day, week after week, month after month, the guard came. He came in the rain and he came in the snow. After one whole year, the teacher was moved by the guard's perseverance and determination and finally accepted him as a student. First, the teacher asked him to pick up a heavy bow and hold it up in the air. After a few minutes, the guard's arms started shaking with tiredness.

After that, every day, the teacher made him work in the palace gardens carrying heavy loads in each hand. The guard began to feel cheated that the teacher was not teaching him to be an archer and he considered leaving him and searching for someone who could teach him better.
