QUESTION 1 - COMPREHENSION TEST

Read the text and answer the questions about the text

THE LOYAL ROTTWEILER

This magnificent breed is a superb companion and protector, but isn't suited to every home.

1. The Rottie owner must be a responsibe person who loves this breed. A large breed requires not only plenty of quality owner-time, it also requires correct discipline, socialisation from puppyhood and a minimum amount of formal training in order to maximise the potential of this dog and ensure that he becomes a well-adjusted canine citizen.

2. If the Rottweiler is properly socialised as a puppy, it will accept other animals with which it is raised. Care should be taken when introducing other dogs, especially of the same sex. All interaction with other pets such as cats should be carefully supervised until certain that there is mutual respect and acceptance and there is no danger of problems.

3. As a large breed which is intelligent and active, the Rottweiler requires ongoing training right from when you collect your puppy from the breeder. Socialisation is vital and your first stop should be reputable training school where you should enrol for regular classes. Basic obedience classes should start at an appropiate age and this process will help to foster a sense of disipline and good behaviour in your Rottweiler.

4. Rottweilers love children and make excellent pets and protectors. Having said this, all dog owners should be responsible and ensure that children treat the dog properly. Very small children can be clumsy and inadvertently hurt animals when trying to play with them; dogs can also become rough when playing, espesially as puppies, and knock children over or otherwise hurt them in rough play. When puppies play they 'play-bite' each other, and when playing wiyh children may do the same – with painful results.

5. Interaction between dogs and children should always be carefully supervised to avoid problems. Never allow children to play roughly with dogs, especially a large breed like a Rottweiler, and expect the dog to not retaliate. Be sensible and keep strict discipline.

QUESTION 3 - SUMMARY

Follow the steps:

Step 1 – Read the text

- Use a pencil and underline all the dates and names (1)

I was born in Johannesburg. When I was thirteen, I entered a talent show at a missionary school and walked off with the first prize. In 1952 I was chosen to sing with the Manhattan Brothers and toured South Africa with them. Then, in 1956, I wrote and released the song "Pata Pata".

In 1959 I became the first South African to win a Grammy Award. That was a very special occasion.

One of the saddest days for me was when South Africa banned me from returning home because I appeared in a documentary called "Come Back Africa". This upset the apartheid government of South Africa. I only returned to South Africa 30 years later.

I toured with great singers such as Paul Simon, Nina Simone, Hugh Masekela and Dizzy Gillespie. Finally I returned to South Africa in December 1990, one of the happiest days of my life. Four years later I started a charity project to raise funds to protect women in South Africa.

Although I have weathered many storms, including car accidents, a plane crash and cancer, I have tried to remain active and serve my fellow South Africans.
